

M. Julian Isaacson, Sculptor

Stone Revival

M. Julian Isaacson is a classically trained sculptor. He began studying his father's sculptural work at a very young age, and initially worked solely in hardwood sculpture using only hand tools. In 1986, Isaacson expanded his sculptural repertoire to include marble. His years of painstaking work with hand tools on hardwoods fine-tuned his skills and enhanced his results in stone. He finds stone to be "a much more challenging medium, which allows more expedient results with finer detail."

In 2001, Isaacson expanded to include Stone Revival Reproductions.

Original works are duplicated via a molding process that picks up the natural stone-carved detail. Color is then added, creating a unique faux finish. Many of his fine art pieces have been copied and reproduced as limited editions. Smaller tiles are custom designed to become wainscoting tiles and can be used repetitiously in crown moldings, wainscoting, backsplashes. To view Isaacson's work, visit www.stonerevival.com.
